3. Could you briefly describe the research project(s) relevant to this workshop and that you'd want to share? (overall timeline, methodology, children involved)

I am currently working on my Ph.D project about needs-driven innovation with people with intellectual disabilities (Action Design Research). My project aims at exploring the involvement of people with intellectual disabilities in design activities. My data is collected through interviews, observations, and photovoice.

4. If you have already published about this(ese) project(s), what types of contributions have you made?

- Artifact-centered
- Methodological
- Design space/Implications (intermediate-level design knowledge)
- User-study
- Theoretical implications/frameworks

- Documents to improve practices of people working with the children (social workers, educators, therapists, teachers...)
- Patent
- Other

5. Which type of venues have you published/are you planning to publish in?

- HCI
- Non-HCI
- Both

6. If you have published/are planning to publish in non-HCI venues, what kind of fields did you aim to contribute to?

Disability studies

7. What kind of insights do you think research with marginalised children bring to the field of Children-Computer Interaction?

Working with marginalised individuals contributes to insights that are relevant to other user groups (design activities, methodology)—also, valuable experiences in e.g facilitation.

8. Are there challenges you have experienced / are experiencing regarding formulating the contributions of your research?

Involvement has been time-consuming. Moreover, it has been challenging to understand, explore, and communicate with the participants I some stages of the design process. As gathering consent. I have also faced some challenges in finding the right outlet for my research

9. In terms of workshop organizing, what type of participation modalities would you prefer?

- Primarily a synchronous discussion (skype, zoom etc) of challenges, recommendations, and your research, supported by shared documents
- Primarily an asynchronous discussion (slack, discord) of challenges, recommendations, and your research, with synchronous moments to meet and network (such as virtual coffee breaks)
- A publication of all submissions based on this form as workshop contributions online
- No publication of these submissions
- Write-up of a summary of all submissions by the organizers on the website and on social media
